12. Campus Report: Director Corey T. Alderdice, Arkansas School for Mathematics, Sciences and the Arts:

Director Corey Alderdice provided an update to the Board of Trustees on the mission and current initiatives of the Arkansas School for Mathematics, Sciences, and the Arts. Established in 1991, opened in 1993, and now celebrating a quarter century of educational excellence, ASMSA exists to assist schools and districts by providing appropriately challenging learning opportunities to talented and motivated students. Through the nationally acclaimed residential experience, free out-of-school enrichment opportunities, digital learning initiatives, and educator development programs, ASMSA seeks to improve the quality of learning for all Arkansas students. The school's recent efforts have been framed around three concepts: addressing local need, achieving national prominence, and inspiring our students toward a global vision.

Excellence in educational innovation is core to ASMSA's mission and commitment to student success. Study.com ranked ASMSA among the nation's Top 30 most innovative high school STEM programs. ASMSA's Coding Arkansas' Future was recognized as inaugural honorees by Code.org's Champions of Computer Science awards as well as the National Consortium of Secondary STEM School's Innovative Student STEM Program Award. To date, the Coding Arkansas' Future initiative has been central to the state achieving Governor Hutchinson's vision for Arkansas as a national leader in computer science education. Twenty percent of all high school students enrolled in a coding class originate from ASMSA. Since 2015, one-quarter of all newly licensed CS teachers have participated in ASMSA's yearlong training cohort, and 40% of all CS teachers have received some form of professional development from ASMSA.

Much of Director Alderdice's comments focused on the school's residential experience for gifted high school students. ASMSA students participate in what the school refers to as a "college bridge" environment that combines the best aspects of both high school and college. Students receive the guidance, support, and supervision associated with high school. Students can also expect the rigor, course options, research experiences, study abroad, and more that come only through university-level study. ASMSA students finish high school in an environment that offers advanced learning with outstanding faculty. More than 50 courses are available for college credit through a partnership with the University of Arkansas at Fort Smith. All students must earn at least 30 hours of university credit as part of graduation requirements. In turn, families of graduates are able to save an estimated $14,000 in college tuition.

ASMSA offers a program not only where students can connect with intellectual peers but also live and learn alongside young people from diverse backgrounds. Over the past five years students have come to ASMSA from 71 of the state's 75 counties. Twenty-eight percent of students identify as part of a minority group. One-third of students come from low-income backgrounds. Supporting students from diverse socio-economic backgrounds has been a core component of ASMSA's commitment to equity in access and success. ASMSA leads its 15 peer institutions in the number of low-income students and doubles the average of its benchmark institutions. Comparatively, only 2% of low-income students nationally are performing at advanced levels—an indication of readiness for academic acceleration programs like ASMSA. In 2017, the school articulated that commitment anew through the development of the ASMSA "upwARd Promise." The framework ensures that opportunities are available at no cost to support students through the application process, eliminate all primary expenses during their time at ASMSA, and position them for selection and financial aid at top colleges and universities in Arkansas and across the nation.

The school has made substantial commitments to achieving the legislated Arts mission added in 2004. ASMSA already offers unique courses like Filmmaking, Folk Music and Acoustics, and Wax Sculpture. With three full-time arts added since 2014, ASMSA has radically expanded available courses in painting, drawing, art history, craft, design, digital arts, creative writing, and other arts electives. With the addition of a full-time music instructor, new investments are also being made in the band and small ensembles program.

ASMSA is also leading the way in offering courses in entrepreneurship that allow students to build new businesses and expand their networks. Students are able to learn alongside professionals through partnerships with the Little Rock Tech Park. Interdisciplinary courses in folk music and acoustics, time travel, the history of infectious diseases, and other subjects are hallmarks of the school's interest in broad inquiry and engagement across disciplines.

More than 350 students and faculty have had the chance to study abroad and explore the world over the past six years thanks to ASMSA's Global Learning Program. All students have access to a grant to support participation in global travel through school-approved experiences. The school offers between six and ten full need-based scholarships each year to promote access for low-income students. ASMSA also works to position students for selection in nationally competitive programs like the National Security Language Initiative for Youth, Congress-Bundestag Youth Exchange, and other opportunities.

13. President's Report: Donald R. Bobbitt, University of Arkansas System:

President Don Bobbitt thanked Director Corey Alderdice and the faculty, staff and students of ASMSA for hosting the meeting and making everyone feel welcome. He then recognized Chancellor Steve Cole who introduced several CCCUA students who were in attendance. These students serve as ambassadors for the CCCUA campus.

Dr. Bobbitt thanked Dr. Margaret Tanner and the UAFS Chancellor Search Committee for their hard work and reported that four candidates have been identified and have agreed to visit UAFS to interview for the position. At the conclusion of the interviews, feedback will be processed by the search committee who will then come forward with a recommendation for Dr. Bobbitt. He also expressed appreciation to Trustee Boyer, a Fort Smith native, for serving on the committee and representing the Board, and acknowledged the great work by UAFS Interim Chancellor Edward Serna.

He then reported that UACCM Interim Chancellor Diana Arn is doing an exceptional job. The UACCM Chancellor Search Committee has met and is in the process of finalizing the prospectus and the position ad. In addition, the website for UACCM is being upgraded to better convey the wonderful characteristics of the institution and make it easier to navigate. Additionally, he thanked Trustee Eichler for serving on the committee and representing the Board.

President Bobbitt reported that the executive committee of ARE-ON interviewed six candidates for the position of ARE-ON Executive Director. From these interviews three candidates were selected to be invited to Little Rock and Fayetteville (central office for ARE-ON) to interview for the position in April. He noted that the president of the UA System is the Chair of the ARE-ON Board. ARE-ON serves not only the UA institutions but also all of higher education in the State. The system's time and effort in helping the network thrive and grow is an invaluable service to the entire state.

In closing, Dr. Bobbitt reported that betting on sporting events is now permitted in Arkansas, including betting on college and amateur sports. Although this activity will provide additional new revenue for the state, it also creates significant potential conflicts for those working for, attending, or otherwise associated with institutions of higher education, particularly if they are privy to information not publicly available. This fact is codified in the rules promulgated by the governing bodies of intercollegiate sports. In order to ensure that the University of Arkansas System is compliant with its accrediting bodies, he has asked General Counsel JoAnn Maxey to work with her colleagues to develop appropriate UA System policies for the Board to consider. He hopes that a draft of these rules will be ready by the May meeting with formal adoption to occur at either the Board retreat in August or the September meeting of the Board.

WHEREAS, the activities proposed will bring to campus a number of potential students who might enroll on campus as a result of their exposure to its facilities and its personnel while engaged in these activities; and

WHEREAS, the contemplated activities will generate funds to be paid to the University for housing and meals and for the use of other institutional facilities which will be used to help support the auxiliary functions of the campuses serving to enroll students;

Emergencies or disasters can happen at any time or any place without warning. Planning for disasters and response effort must take in account the unique needs and abilities of children who make up a quarter of the United States population. Being involved in a youth preparedness camp is a great way to increase a community's resilience and help foster future generation of prepared adults. Here at UA – Pulaski Technical College, our goal, with the support of the Arkansas Department of Emergency Management and Saline county Emergency Management, is to train young people in skills such as basic first aid and safety, fire safety, light search and rescue, and disaster psychology. When camp is over, we believe the youth members will leave with the skills they need to aid in recovery and response efforts in the event a disaster occurs. They will be able to help and support efforts of emergency personnel in a time where as much help as possible could be beneficial to saving a life. Lastly, they will possess the knowledge of not only how to treat those wounded but how to also care and respect their mental state as well. What we instill on the youth today will enable them to be better leaders and caregivers in the future.
